Buttercups

Dear parents,

At the end of each school day we all look forward to the Show and Tell time in our class. I really like this part of the day and children just can't wait when the two clock hands meet up at 12.

First of all, bringing a toy to school makes the younger children to feel secure and comfortable when they are still having the difficulties to say good bye in the morning. But most importantly each child's social, emotional and language skills will grow and develop from this activity as the children learn to use descriptive language, practice listening skills and share their special items with others.

Show and tell time gives a child a chance to be the center of attention for a bit as he explains the significance of the item he brought and while other children show interest and ask questions about that loved object. This positive social interaction can really boost a child's self-esteem and make him feel good about himself. It helps foster public speaking skills and helps children feel comfortable with talking in front of a group of peers as well as become a listeners and each child learns to be patient, take turns, use kind words. Show and tell can open up doors to making new friends. Some of the children may have a similar toy, which provides a connection and opportunity to talk about a similar interest. Sharing prized possessions with classmates makes for a fun and comfortable learning arena for everyone involved.

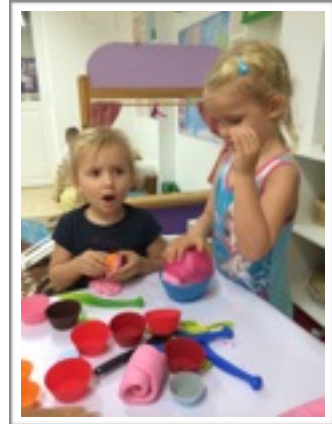

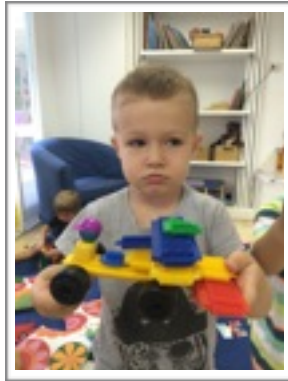

Our classroom was very busy this month and I hope you will enjoy the pictures.
